They put across the idea through newspaper cut outs, inspiring books especially ones penned by rape victims that spoke aloud about unspoken and hidden truths. The thousands that came in to witness the Expo, especially the school children, were left inspired, with a thought provoking message in their minds to react against unjust socio-cultural practices.

We now live in a world where an act of sexual violence no longer surprises anyone. Irrespective of gender, invasion of personal space seems to be too common an issue.
We can now predict what would follow a rape - outrage that seems to live for a time shorter than it takes for it to die out.
Are you a young child?
An adult?
What are you wearing?
Who are you?
Doesn't matter.
This installation seeks to remind everyone of this hostility.
