Editorial

Ms. Devika Sujith

“To co-exist“ has become a matter of relevance and more often we tend to forget that the world that we are living in is not a private space that we own and should be shared appropriately with our fellow beings. The world today is nothing less than a “heap of broken images” as we have accustomed to being indifferent to the amount of pollution and waste that is generated in and around us on a daily basis. The massive climatic change that the world is witnessing today is kind of a clarion call or may be beyond a clarion call insinuating that we are far behind in maintaining the balance that the planet is yearning for.

The planet had witnessed a brief period of relief from the sickening dust and dirt during the COVID 19 pandemic in 2020. It was a sigh of relief to watch the flora and fauna that co exist with us bloom back to normalcy. Cities which were as busy as bees shut down and allowed our planet to breathe more. While speaking about it three years later the world has gone far beyond its previous state and the scenario is getting worse with each passing day. Constant injunctions are neglected as we live each day of our life in happiness and peace thinking only about us. To be sustainable is the need of the hour. It is imperative to pay heed to the signs of warning the planet has been showing us over the years. Let us not forget to pay back by living a responsible life.

Dear Sir/Madam

National Science Day is celebrated every year on February 28 to mark and recognize the contributions of scientists towards the development of the country. On this day, in 1928, Indian Physicist Chandrasekhara Venkata Raman made an important discovery in the field of spectroscopy, which was later named after him – the Raman Effect. For his work, CV Raman was awarded the prestigious Nobel Prize in Physics in 1930. National science day is celebrated as one of the main science festivals in India every year with following purpose- To widely spread a message about the significance of scientific applications in the daily life of the people, to display all the activities, efforts and achievements in the field of science for welfare of human being, to discuss all the issues and implement new technologies for the development of the science, to give an opportunity to the scientific minded citizens in the country, to encourage the people as well as popularize the Science and Technology.

The Research department of Fisheries and aquaculture (RDFA), St. Albert's College (Autonomous) Ernakulam is organizing National Seminar, Popular science Lecture, Poster Presentation Competition on the focal theme "Global Science for Global Well Being" to become a part of remembering this great achievement in the history of Indian Science.

The programme is scheduled on February 28th and venue is Bernard Hall, St. Albert's College, Ernakulam. Cooperation and participation of researchers, students and teachers are cordially invited.
